Pandemics and Rhetorical Questions

Do pigs fly?
Why bother?
How many times do I have to say that?

These are examples of rhetorical questions that you may have used recently.

Today in a meeting a friend drew our attention to a verse in the Bible, Numbers 11:23. In it the LORD asks Moses a rhetorical question that must be asked of us as well in times of stress and uncertainty. The verse reads:

*And the LORD said to Moses, "Is the LORD'S hand shortened?
Now you shall see whether my word will come true for you or not."*

A rhetorical question is asked not expecting an answer. It is asked to have an effect or impact on the hearer or reader. It is a question to get us thinking deeper or differently.

This question in the 11th chapter of Numbers is linked directly to the specific challenges and growing faith of God's people. It is common in the scriptures for this type of question to be used to stir us to think differently or deeper than we have been thinking. Consider the impact of the simple question about the strength of God's hand or arm.

1. Whatever challenges you face, it is not because God is not powerful enough to stop, change or rearrange them. How would you describe what God's hand has done and is able to do? Think about that.
2. Whatever challenges you face, God is up to something that you may not be considering as necessary or important. If God could stop or change it, but he doesn't, then what is he trying to accomplish? Think about that.
3. Whatever challenges you face, do pigs fly? No. Never. Not in real life, at all. If God's strength and reach are unlimited, then is there any way he will not care for you, his child? Does God fly? Yes. Is God trustworthy? Think about that.

Please continue to pray and encourage each other to consider the unseen things that God is doing among us in these days. Is God capable of doing everything in your life that he wants to do for his glory and your good? Please send me any thoughts you may have as to what are some of the specific things God wants to do among us through this pandemic experience. I would love to think with you about them.
