You are tempted to lie when your mom asks if you finished your homework. Then you remember what God's word says about choosing honesty.
(Proverbs 12:22)

You think about saying something unkind, then you remember that God says to build others up.
(1 Thessalonians 5:11)

You start to make an unwise choice, then you remember what God says about wise choices.
(James 1:5)

You are SUPER mad at someone who hurt you and begin to think of ways to get back at them. Then you stop, take a deep breath, bow your head, and talk to God about how you're feeling.

You have a decision to make, and you aren't sure what to do. You stop and talk to God and ask for help.

Two friends are fighting and want you to pick a side. You aren't sure what to do so you stop and talk to God about it.

There's a group of kids at school who seem cool. But when you play with them at recess, you realize they aren't all that nice, and they don't make good choices. You decide to spend time with friends who will encourage you to make wise choices.

You're worried about a situation with a friend and need some good advice. Who could you talk to who will help you follow God more closely and give you advice that honors God?

You did something unkind, and you're not sure how to make things right. You tell your small group about it, and they encourage you to make things right by admitting you were wrong and asking the friend you hurt to forgive you.

There's a kid at school who sits by himself a lot. He rides your bus and gets off a street over from you. The next time you're on the bus, you invite him to come to a fun event at your church and ask your mom to talk to his mom about it too.

You find a cool pencil case on the floor in the school library. You turn it in to the librarian so she can find the owner.

You notice a kid has left his math paper on his desk with all the answers to the homework. It's a hard assignment, and you're tempted to see if your answers are right. Instead, you walk up to the teacher's desk and ask her to explain the problem again.
